April 5, 1961 - Wednesday

This was a full day. At eleven we met the British delegation at the White House. On their side were Macmillan, Home, Caccia, Hoyer Millar, Sir Norman Brook, Sir Patrick Dean, Philip deZulueta and others. The U.S. delegation included Kennedy, Rusk, Ball, Kohler and myself. Douglas Dillon, Walter Heller, McNamara, Harriman, Adlai Stevenson, Dean Acheson, Mac Bundy were present off and on.

Dillon set forth clearly and well our financial position; George Ball discoursed persuasively on the importance we attach to the Six, and why we would welcome the British adhering to the Treaty of Rome, Acheson brilliantly summarized his report on NATO, dealing especially with military dispositions.

Most of us lunched at the White House. The food was worthy of a great French restaurant, with Puligny Montrachet, Corton Grancey and Dom Perignon as the wines. I sat between the PM and Derek Hoyer Millar.
